RINGS is an international association with the aim of bringing together research institutions engaged in gender studies, feminist research and women's studies on a global basis.

The principal aim of RINGS is to promote advanced and transformative research in transnational cooperation between member institutions. Key objectives are: to create inclusiveness and collaborations that will enable global capacity building; and the advancement of disciplinary and transdisciplinary feminist-based gender studies that explicitly address social inequalities that have gendered roots and/or consequences.

Now with nearly 50 members, global inclusiveness is a key goal for RINGS. We strive to counter existing geopolitical divisions that can lead to a narrow canon in academic journals, higher education curricula, and research agendas. Centres from Africa, Asia, and the Americas, as well as post-socialist Europe, are especially welcome.

RINGS confines membership to institutions and centres rather than individuals. For more on membership criteria, visit the website www.ringsgender.org and/or contact:
